

But it doesn't seem that unauthorized use of a celebrity's face etc. necessarily falls under the infringement of that right.

Well, there seems to be no problem as long as it is not an act of freeriding on their goodwill.

That's important★ Please lend me your costume for the manga event, Misube-chan.

Police Tools
 Policewoman Costume
 Female Prisoner Costume

No. These acts are just examples. So, there may be other acts that infringe on the right.

Hey. Are there only three acts that infringe on the 'Right of Publicity'?

~Day 30~ Acts that don't infringe on the Right of Publicity

Takata Kawa the susp...

Well, photos like this one published in the article are for reporting an incident.

In other words, this photo is a different situation from a photo book.

Moreover, no one will want to buy a magazine just because it has photos like this.

Shocking scoop!!
 Takata was arrested for drunk driving!
 She may retire from voice acting.....!

Hey, hey! It's a terrible example!!

For example, let's say that Ms. Takata caused such an incident.

So, this doesn't constitute an infringement of the Right of Publicity!

Instead, your crime is to insult my favorite voice actress.

Huff-huff

Your Goodwill dressed as a policewoman is huge for me.♥

Clank!

What's!?

I'll arrest you, IP Police ....

There is no problem if it's an act that doesn't free ride on their Goodwill like the news.

Even I, who love her, can't be attracted to this photo.
