

The same goes for ships and planes.

In Japan, there is a registration system for cars in the same way as real estate.

When a car is bought and sold, it's considered a movable property and so treated as a design for an article.

So, what type of design does a car fall under the category?

Ms. Maizono seems to have properly registered this tank.

Where did you capture it?

Our IP club held a training camp.

I thank you for providing a car, Ms. Maizono.

My Medium Tank M4 (Sherman) seats five people so it was just right.

~Day 40~ IP Club training camp

The tent is temporary object that can be set up for a short time.

This looks like a circus tent...

I set up a tent. Does it treat as a building design?

So, it's treated as a design for an article.

Hey! Hey! Hey!

I see.

So, street lamps also treated as a design for an article, not a building design.

Because street lamps are installed on the land and used, but they're considered movable property when bought and sold.

I'm going to tell you an old story about the history of the IP Acts ...

Witch's going to cast a deep sleep spell, so you better cover your ears!

Misube and the others have fallen asleep!

If you go to bed before me, I'll draw your sleeping face.

Let's make a profit on the NYSE by tomorrow!!

OK! All set for staying up late!!

So, let's stay up late in our IP Club way!

If anyone falls asleep, I'll blow my vuvuzela!
